The action of the play takes place in the Lounge of Edward Halliday's house near Cheltenham.

ACT ONE

Scene One                    A Sunday morning in August.
Scene Two                    "Bare Bosom'd Night" by Betty Halliday

INTERVAL

ACT TWO

Scene One                    Later the same morning.
Scene Two                    The following Monday evening.

Most parents would be happy and proud to have a daughter capable of writing, and getting published, a book which turns out to be a best seller. But, for Cheltenham M.P. Edward Halliday and his wife, the discovery that she has used members of the family and their friends for her basic material results in consternation and suspicion.

This clever comedy which opened at the Cambridge Theatre in 1954, is set in the family home in Cheltenham including the second scene where the audience is shown the contents of the book.

The intrigues and relationships which are suggested in the book lead to the confusion and comedy in the remainder of the play.

Of course we know it is all fiction - or is it ???
